No Longer Human is a manga adaptation and modernisation of Osamu Dazai's novel of the same name, following Yozo Oba, a young man who is terrified of other human beings and feels himself alienated from them. I see no problems in adapting the story to a modern setting, as alienation and fear and mistrust of other people exist in any time period. A story with these themes can be told well no ...

What is sometimes described as Osamu Dazai's suicide note, this autobiographical novel, seen as one of the great Japanese literary feats, No Longer Human (1948) is the story of Oba Yozo, a literary doppelganger of the author; the manga, over 600 pages long, is a terrific feat in itself, what I have read to be a pretty faithful adaptati

No Longer Human by Junji Ito - Goodreads

No Longer Human is more realistic than his usual horror fare, but it's nonetheless fitting material for his strengths. The main character Yozo is himself a manga artist who specializes in monsters "so heart-rending as to even stupefy myself." One wonders how much Ito might identify with such a protagonist in the same line of work, especially since this manga is already concerned with the ...
